Place: The courtyard in front of the palace at Thebes

The Background of the Play

Following the death of Oedipus, his two sons, Polyneices and Etocles, contend for the throne of Thebes. Etocles forces Polyneices out of the city, but Polyneices raises an army and returns to try to capture Thebes. During the battle, the brothers challenge each other to single combat and kill each other. To fill the vacuum of power, Creon, uncle to the sons of Oedipus, assumes the crown and orders that Etocles be buried with full honors as a hero and that Polyneices receive no burial as a traitor to the city, thereby denying him access to the afterlife.
